Says Cornell's CoachCourtney Admits that Jim Rice Has One of the Best Crews Ever Seen on the River—Vivian Nickalls Finds Fault with the "Critics."

Small Commodore of the Hudson River regatta, N. Y., June 19.—With the international polo players and the cup defense yacht occupying the center of the stage, the sporting public has given little thought to the crew of college rowers who are toiling early and late on the Hudson, preparing for the big regatta which will be rowed over the historic course from Krum Elbow to Yellow Point next Friday afternoon. Although there has been something less interest than usual in what they are doing, the college sweep swimmers will probably present one of the greatest races that this or any other country has ever seen.

Cornell, Columbia, Pennsylvania, Syracuse, Wisconsin and the University of Washington, all the way from the Pacific Coast are the crews that will battle for supremacy, and already it seems to be written that the race will be between Cornell and Columbia after one of the mightiest struggles the Hudson has ever seen. Every one of the six crews that will row in the varsity race is tuned up to concert pitch and not a single coach on the river is willing to admit that there will be any kind of a runaway in the first couple of miles, such as have marked the races of the last year or two. Jim Rice, the Columbia coach, is the only one who has made a definite prediction and even he has qualified his prophecy to the extent that the real race for the victory will not begin until the bridge has been passed, when he expects Cornell and Columbia to battle to the front and fight it out between themselves through the last mile from the bridge to the shades of Yellow Point.

Charley Courtney, the wizard of the Cornell crews, is not at all secretive about saying that he thinks Rice is pretty nearly right about his prediction, for there is no crew which he fears more than the boatload that Rice has brought up from Morning-side Heights.

"Rice may have had no material at the beginning of the year," said Courtney as he sat whittling a piece of wood in front of the Cornell boat-house, "but he certainly has moulded together one of the best rowing crews that this river has ever seen, and you can take it straight from me that that same Columbia boatload will be right there at the finish."

"I never make a prediction about my own crew. I can tell pretty well what each one of my crews is doing, but I would not care to go on record as saying that they were faster or slower than any of the crews you see going up and down the river in practice. I think it pretty good advice to let the race be my oracle. You know every crew looks good and appears to be going fast when it is far away. But you never can tell how fast a crew is really going until you see it in action against the crews that it is trying to beat."

Cornell's stroke is the anomaly of the river. Rival coaches have sat studying the "Old Man's" stroke for hours, but not one of them seems to have been able to grasp its secret. Every part of the swing, both on the stroke and the recovery, is so blended into one rhythmic action that the men seem to be getting their power from some hidden well. There is no sharp jab at the catch, no hurried drive at the finish. Nothing about the "Old Man's" scheme of rowing suggests the application of immense power. And still it is by their power that Cornell crews have been coming down to the Hudson year after year and sweeping all before them. Of course, Courtney has been at the game for more years than he cares to remember, and some of his competitors in the coaching game are just coming into their prime. The fact remains, however, that Courtney has discovered a stroke that has a secret rivalling that long-sought formula, perpetual motion.

The squad at the University of Washington headquarters from Hiram Corns down to the crew are up in arms against the sympathy that is being showered on them. Corns and his crew pride themselves on the fact that they are the only crew that has won the regatta and the returns are in the experts will find that their sympathy has been wasted. To the assertion that they do not know how to row they point to their notable victories over California and Leland Stanford in the coast regatta, and their splendid performance on the Hudson in last year's race when they confounded their critics by smashing down to the finish line in third place, just inches behind the great Cornell crew.

Vivian Nickalls is not much concerned about the criticisms of his English methods, and he promises to make the wise ones sit up once or twice before they are through watching the race on Friday.

There are altogether too many experts around this blooming river," said Nickalls, "and I think that next year I'll move away from everybody and row down where Harry Vail is at Milton. I'll bet not one of these lead pencil experts has seen the Wisconsin crew row, and still they pick them to places as if they had been following them in the coaching launch for months."

Jim Ten Eyck has raised the old question of tide again and there are indications that the "Old Man" of Syracuse is not at all pleased with the way the races have been scheduled. In the freshman and junior races, Ten Eyck figures that his crews, which have drawn outside courses, will have to battle with the last of the incoming tide while the crews inshore will be feeling the first effects of the ebb tide.

Time Has Left Its Mark on Face of Daredevil Cyclist, but It Hasn't Affected Speed of Southerner, Who Started Career Two Decades Ago.

While the heartbreaking speed of twenty-two years of championship races has written its indelible mark on the visage of Bobby Walthour, the veteran pace follower, who is campaigning at Brighton Beach this season, it has not shaken the spirit of the intrepid daredevil whose name stands for recklessness and sensationalism in cycle racing. The face of Walthour was one of the most attractive in cycle racing. To-day it is hardly recognizable as being that of the youngster who broke into the bike game at Atlanta, Ga., two decades ago.

NEW 30-MILE MARK BEHIND
PACE HIS LATEST RECORD.

But with it all Walthour has never side-stepped the challenge of any of his rivals, and after years of campaigning is now setting new world records for riding behind motors not equipped with windshields. When he set a new thirty mile record at the beach Sunday night his performance was received with wonderful enthusiasm and many of the old-timers that rooted for the Southern star when he was taking them into camp at the beginning of his career led the cheering for his performance Sunday night.

In the grandstand there sat four persons who were, perhaps, more interested than any others. They were the wife and three children of the veteran pedal pusher. Most of the last ten years they have spent with him in Europe, where he has led the list of winning riders for all those years.

Time and time again they have seen him cross the tape in front of the best riders the world has ever produced. Time and time again they have heard thousands of persons
